Brought My Family Together By Timothy Haugh I don't know when I first came across the show QI but, ever since then, I've become quite interested in it. I've tracked down episodes on YouTube and have become totally taken in by its combination of humor and information. Stephen Fry is the perfect host for this, and the celebrity panelists make for plenty of wit and interest. It's a great show. Great shows, however, do not necessarily make for great books. I have numerous books of facts on my shelf. Most of them are useful as resources but not particularly interesting to read. This one, on the other hand, not only pulls together many bits of fascinating information but also presents it in a way that is surprisingly easy to read. There are four statements of fact on every page (except one) connected in obvious but odd ways leading to wide-ranging pieces of information. Take this from p. 124: Between 1948 and 1998, 20,362 Israelis were killed in wars and 20,852 were killed on the roads. // The American TV sex therapist Dr. Ruth Westheimer trained as an Israeli sniper. // Snipur is Icelandic for clitoris. One of the disappointments I often have in books like this is that the facts are not interesting enough and often I already know too many of them from other sources. That was not true here. I knew some of the things from this book (like the bit about Dr. Ruth above) but the vast majority of it was new to me. And I really found most of them interesting, though I did tire of the definitions of odd words after a while. Still, that's splitting hairs. I read this book straight through over a couple days, reading parts of it aloud to my family as I came across things I thought they might enjoy. All of us got into it and enjoyed it. It's strange but true: a collection of interesting facts can bring a family together. 4 of 4 people found the following review helpful. Buy a dictionary instead. By Randy D. Saake Might as well buy a dictionary, half the book is just definitions of words. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five Stars By Mark Terry Great book to pass the time on long car rides.

A New York Times Bestseller From the creators of the hugely popular BBC quiz show QI and the best-selling Book of General Ignorance: 1,227 mind-bending facts. Did you know? Cows moo in regional accents. The international dialing code for Russia is 007. The water in the mouth of a blue whale weighs more than its body. Pants are responsible for twice as many accidents as chain saws. Saddam Hussein's bunker was designed by the grandson of the woman who built Hitler's bunker. Heroin was originally sold as cough medicine. 1,227 Quite Interesting Facts to Blow Your Socks Off is a trove of the strangest, funniest, and most improbable tidbits of knowledge all painstakingly researched and distilled to a brilliant and shocking clarity.
