Richard Curtis, Paul Mayhew-Archer : The "Vicar of Dibley": The Complete Companion to Dibley before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The "Vicar of Dibley": The Complete Companion to Dibley:

For many years, when I served in a rural parish myself, I actually thought that the Vicar of Dibley was a reality show. Now that I have moved back to the city I realise that it was not. This collection of scripts is not complete, some of the more recent episodes are missing because the volume was published before they were aired. That said, it is a real joy. I couldn't stop laughing!0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five StarsBy A. C. BowmanThis is a gorgeous book. Many thanks :)0 of 1 people found the following review helpful. not what I expectedBy Miss NZI thought this would be a book about the making of Dibley, cast info, etc. Instead it's a script for every episode. Nice, but not something to read really.

Dibley is a village in need of a new vicar and Geraldine Granger is that woman - "a babe with heaving bosoms". Meet the parishoners and fall in love with Dibley as the scripts of the television programme are published here in a "prayer-book" format.

The scripts for this successful series in which Dawn French plays the buxom Rev Geraldine Granger are presented appropriately in small format "prayer-book" style and supplemented by information about the village of Dibley, its history and present inhabitants. It's a funny and original comedy idea and could have been fraught with problems in view of the controversy about the introduction of women priests. But Curtis seems to have negotiated that hurdle unscathed, as one would expect from an ace writer with Not the Nine O'Clock News, Mr Bean, Blackadder, Four Weddings and a Funeral and Notting Hill to his credit. The book will be backed by a big marketing spend and publicity campaign, Dawn French and Emma Chambers (the dozy but desirable Alice) will be doing bookshop signings, and BBC1 is repeating the series in the run-up to Christmas.
