

[Download] Thinking in the Dark: Cinema, Theory, Practice

Thinking in the Dark: Cinema, Theory, Practice

From Ingramcontent

**Download PDF | ePub | DOC | audiobook | ebooks*

 Download

 Read Online

#1032825 in Books Ingramcontent 2015-10-16 2015-09-23Original language:EnglishPDF # 1 9.02 x .76 x 5.96l, 1.05 #File Name: 0813566282288 pagesThinking in the Dark Cinema Theory Practice | File size: 25.Mb

From Ingramcontent : Thinking in the Dark: Cinema, Theory, Practice before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Thinking in the Dark: Cinema, Theory, Practice:

2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Film Theory Starts HereBy Steven WoodwardFull disclosure: I am actually one of the contributors to this book, writing the chapter -- one of twenty-one -- on Bela Balazs. Nevertheless, from the perspective of someone who regularly has to teach film theory at the undergraduate level, I have to say that this book is a godsend. I've been teaching film theory for ten years now, previously using the standard anthology, Brandy and Cohen's, published by OUP, and more recently the alternate one by Corrigan, White, and Mazaj published by Bedford/St. Martin's. My experience has been that students are now incapable of reading the original theoretical essays and extracts collected in these anthologies. And to be fair, even with an editorial apparatus of introductions and footnotes, that theory is becoming more and more opaque, distant in socio-historical context and in mode of expression. Let's face it: most (pre-internet) theorists aren't actually celebrated for their concise and clear prose; and reading just an excerpt from their body of writing actually results in a fairly major distortion of their ideas. As a result of all this, the classroom experience has become a torment, for them and me. The great advantage of this new volume, then, is that it provides a very good sense of the sociohistorical context of each theorist, a nuanced overview of their key theoretical ideas (including the evolution of those ideas over the course of their lives), and a demonstration of how that theory can actually be productively applied, both to a "classical" film and a much more recent movie. Each chapter does all of this in a mere 5000 words (so you won't find any rambling academic prose in this particular volume)! I've just used this book in my film theory course for the first time and the change in the mood and energy of the class is unbelievable. My students are actually excited about film theory now, and they're writing essays and short analyses that are inspired and inspiring. For non-academics, too, this is probably the best entry point to this curious and fascinating field.

Today's film scholars draw from a dizzying range of theoretical perspectives they're just as likely to cite philosopher Gilles Deleuze as they are to quote classic film theorist Andr Bazin. To students first encountering them, these theoretical lenses for viewing film can seem exhilarating, but also overwhelming. Thinking in the Dark introduces readers to twenty-one key theorists whose work has made a great impact on film scholarship today, including Rudolf Arnheim, Sergei Eisenstein, Michel Foucault, Siegfried Kracauer, and Judith Butler. Rather than just discussing each theorist's ideas in the abstract, the book shows how those concepts might be applied when interpreting specific films by including an analysis of both a classic film and a contemporary one. It thus demonstrates how theory can help us better appreciate films from all eras and genres: from Hugo to Vertigo, from City Lights to Sunset Blvd., and from Young Mr. Lincoln to A.I. and Wall-E. The volume's contributors are all experts on their chosen theorist's work and, furthermore, are skilled at explaining that theorist's key ideas and terms to readers who are not yet familiar with them. Thinking in the Dark is not only a valuable resource for teachers and students of film, it's also a fun read, one that teaches us all how to view familiar films through new eyes. Theorists examined in this volume are: Rudolf Arnheim, Walter Benjamin, Roland Barthes, Andr Bazin, Walter Benjamin, Judith Butler, Stanley Cavell, Michel Chion, Gilles Deleuze, Jean Douchet, Sergei Eisenstein, Jean Epstein, Michel Foucault, Siegfried Kracauer, Jacques Lacan, Vachel Lindsay, Christian Metz, Hugo Münsterberg, V. F. Perkins, Jacques Rancière, and Jean Rouch.

"Offering twenty-one case studies devoted to individual theorists ranging from Walter Benjamin to Michel Chion, Thinking in the Dark is at once expansive in its scope while focused and specific in its application of each theorist's works. Overall, Thinking in the Dark offers a very strong collection of essays from top scholars in the field of film studies, and it should find its way to those seeking a reinvigorated reading of key film theorists. "